

Private Equity and the New Silicon Rush

Private equity firms have poured record amounts into the data center sector, snapping up billions of dollars' worth of digital real estate. Spurred by growing demand from the crypto and artificial intelligence booms, private equity firms have invested in or acquired over 450 data center companies since January 2022. This flood of capital will intensify the longstanding problems with data center operations – such as draining local water sources to cool servers, high and (often under-reported) carbon emissions, acoustic pollution, and increased costs and strain for local electricity ratepayers – that communities are already struggling to reckon with in the face of rapid development. Private equity firms are increasingly in the headlines for these types of conflicts and for their aggressive acquisition strategies more generally. In addition to heavy environmental burdens, sapping community resources, draining local economies and other harms, data center projects often receive government subsidies, meaning state and local dollars – taxpayer money – is going to support PE investment in these projects.

Private equity has spent nearly $200 billion to finance data center deals, with the vast majority of this spending hidden from public view. Since 2022, the private equity industry has acquired or invested in 451 data center-related information technology (IT) companies (with at least an additional 17 in progress), adding sprawling server fleets to their portfolios. The 190 transactions for which the sale price was disclosed or otherwise available totaled $170 billion in private equity spending, with the real figure likely far higher. The rate of purchases is expected to accelerate in step with the predicted surging demand for data capacity by the end of the decade.

Private equity was behind nearly 80 to 90 percent of completed mergers and acquisitions in the sector since 2022. The artificial intelligence \(AI\) and cryptocurrency bubbles and an increasing appetite for computing and storage solutions have driven an explosion of demand for data centers. Server warehouse capacity is expected to double over the next five years, with some estimates suggesting it could as much as quintuple by 2030, reaching 298 gigawatts (GW) of processing power compared to 55 GW in 2023. Seizing on concerns about the present-day shortage of data infrastructure and the possibility that it could extend into the future, private equity has deepened its presence in the sector with larger and larger acquisitions.

Industry research suggests that the four largest deals ever ($10 billion or more) closed in 2021 and 2022. Three of these companies – CyrusOne, Switch and QTS – went to private equity. Private equity's data center merger and acquisition activity reached an all-time high in 2024, with disclosed spending totaling at least $115 billion across 95 completed and in-progress transactions, nearly double the $59.3 billion they spent in 2022 and 2023 combined. These deals spanned direct mergers and acquisitions, taking minority stakes in existing private companies, joint ventures with established data center entities, and private investments in public equity (PIPE; a type of transaction in which private equity purchases public stakes via private placements, discounted stocks or other means). Looking at only completed transactions, private equity completed $41 billion in transactions in 2024, a lion's share of the reported $57 billion in total merger and acquisition activity completed in the sector that year by any buyers. Since 2022, the private equity industry has accounted for 80 to 90 percent of the total value of deals in the data center industry.

The opaque private equity industry has inked some of the largest transactions in the sector, outpacing transactions performed by more transparent public companies. The private equity industry has established a foothold in all parts of the data center lifecycle, from assembling land where future data center campuses will be built (such as Columbia Capital's acquisition of a 2,069-acre parcel in Arizona), to direct data center operation, to data destruction (such as Housatonic Partners' investment in Guardian Data Destruction). Of the 465 data center-related companies invested in by private equity from 2021 to 2024, over half (265) manage, own or operate the computing complexes.

These management/owner/operator companies perform various functions. Some use their processing power for dedicated purposes, such as Scala Data Centers, backed by Coatue Management and the Investment Management Corporation of Ontario, and its artificial intelligence program, or the \$250 million joint venture backed by BridgeTower Capital and Deus X Capital to develop digital asset infrastructure, including cryptocurrency staking. Many other companies, however, maintain data centers to lease digital space to or provide other services to clients, often enterprise-scale institutions. Private equity firms have scooped up dozens of these colocation centers or hyperscale centers, also called "carrier hotels," which provide vacant server space to other corporations. The largest transaction involving a colocation center (since 2022) occurred in December 2024, when private equity firm Blackstone inked an A\$24 billion \(\$15.04 billion\) deal to snag AirTrunk, a company that operates 11 hyperscale centers across Australia, Japan, Hong Kong, Singapore and Malaysia. The second-largest took place just two years earlier in March 2022, when PE firms Kohlberg Kravis Roberts and Global Infrastructure Partners struck a \$15 billion deal to buy out CyrusOne, a company that claims to maintain more than 50 "mission-critical facilities" in North America, Europe and Asia, serving 800 clients.

Private equity firms were responsible for the three largest recorded data center mergers or acquisitions across the entire sector since 2021. These include the aforementioned Airtrunk ($15.04 billion) and CyrusOne ($15 billion) deals, as well as the $11 billion acquisition of Switch, Inc. by alternative asset manager DigitalBridge and private equity firm IFM Investors. The largest non-PE data center transaction ranks fourth on the list of historic deals: real estate investment trust American Tower Corporation's takeover of CoreSite.

DigitalBridge – founded in 2013 – is one of a relatively new breed of asset managers that specifically zeroes in on artificial intelligence and "next-generation digital infrastructure," joined by similar firms such as M/C Partners, Digital Alpha, and SDC Capital Partners. Other specialized private equity firms that have historically focused on energy, such as Energy Capital Partners, are now venturing into digital real estate, evidenced by the firm's joint-venture with KKR to develop data centers and their power generation to keep up with artificial intelligence and cloud computing demand.

Private equity is quickly amassing an extreme amount of market power in an industry that is rapidly expanding. Many of the hallmarks of private equity takeovers remain as these firms move into a relatively new arena. Beyond acquisitions or joint ventures, some private equity firms employ an anticompetitive “roll-up” strategy—buying up several small companies in a specific sector, often geographically concentrated—to amass market power. One of the largest transactions of this nature was when PE firm Asterion Industrial Partners’ portfolio company Retelit bought Irideos and Brennercom for an estimated $413 million, cementing it as a “telecommunications leader” in Italy, where it now owns 35 data centers. In a similar transaction, private equity firm Brookfield combined two of its data center portfolio companies, Cyxtera and Evoque, in order to create a new brand called Centersquare for an estimated $775 million. By April 2024, the new company controlled 320MW of capacity across 50 data center locations. Others have formed partnerships with cryptocurrency miners to leverage their already-running machines – themselves environmentally destructive – to help computation and artificial intelligence development.

The private equity industry has used its gargantuan stake in the data center sector to lobby for increased investment and favorable policy toward data center development. The Data Center Coalition, a trade association representing the various owners and operators of data centers, prominently features several private equity-backed companies across its decision-making Executive, Board and Partner levels of engagement. Among them: KKR- and GIP-backed CyrusOne, SDC Capital-backed Aligned Adaptive Data Centers, Blank Canvas-backed Vantage Data Centers, and others.

With hundreds of billions spent across hundreds of companies in a matter of three years, private equity has cemented itself as a dominant player in the sector, and it has accelerated the flow of capital into energy-intensive, environmentally harmful projects. The private financiers that have driven merger-mania across the entire economy are now turning to this new, rapidly expanding industry. As communities increasingly push back against an impulsive explosion of data centers, private equity will be the dominant actor they are up against.
